

Timber pest inspections and reports

A guide for homebuyers

March 2004

Before you buy a home, it is recommended that you have a timber pest inspection report prepared to make sure the property is not infested by termites or other timber pests.

Including a timber pest inspection condition on your offer

Timber pests can cause costly damage if allowed to go unchecked and can reduce the value of a property. This fact sheet contains general information on how to arrange a thorough timber pest inspection.

The standard buying/selling contract for the transfer of property has two sections, the:

- ▶ Contract for the Sale of Land by Offer and Acceptance (commonly called the "O & A"); and
- ▶ Joint Form of General Conditions for the Sale of Land (also referred to as simply the General Conditions).

The General Conditions cover important contractual obligations for both buyer and seller. This is a formally printed document and not usually varied. The O & A form, however, provides greater flexibility and special conditions can be added to it to meet the needs of both buyer and seller by documenting specific points of agreement over and above the standard general conditions. Special conditions may cover issues about property inspections such as building or pest inspections; who pays for necessary repairs; or anything else important for either buyer or seller.

Any special conditions made to the O & A should be as precisely worded as possible and you may wish to seek legal advice to ensure this. If the offer is accepted, these conditions must be satisfied, or the sale may not be completed.

Because timber pests can cause costly damage to a property, it is recommended that you as a purchaser put a special condition in the contract requiring that a timber pest inspection report be prepared. In order to make the terms of the inspection clear and verifiable, it is best to put your requirement for a timber pest inspection report in the contract as a special condition, rather than relying on verbal agreements with the seller. The special condition should state that if termite activity is sufficient to cause, or have caused, damage then the contract of sale can be cancelled or the seller made liable for any loss incurred.

The Sale by Offer and Acceptance fact sheet can provide you with further information on the offer and acceptance process.

Content of your timber pest special condition

Your special condition should identify the standard to which the timber pest inspection should be carried out and report prepared. For instance, you can specify in the O & A that the timber pest inspection is carried out in accordance with Australian Standard 4349.3 - 1998.

Australian Standard 4349.3 is a nationally accepted standard for timber pest inspections and reports. This type of inspection includes roof and floor timbers, outbuildings and fencing. Timber pests can travel 50 metres underground, so fencing checks are necessary in a thorough inspection.

An inspection and report prepared to Australian Standard 4349.3 will inform you about any current infestation, previous damage, areas likely to be infested in the future, and areas where additional inspections are recommended to maintain effective physical and chemical timber pest barriers.

It is also recommended that the special condition includes:

- ▶ the identification of who will pay for treatment and repairs if the report indicates timber pest activity or damage;
- ▶ a statement allowing you to choose to terminate the sales contract if the report identifies timber pest activity or damage which you are not prepared to accept; and
- ▶ a reasonable timeframe within which you expect the inspection should be carried out.

The seller may offer to pay for your timber pest inspection. Although this option may seem cheaper, there are strong reasons for you to engage your own timber pest inspector.

If you hire your own timber pest inspector, the report will be independent and not affected by a seller's interests. In addition, if you engage the timber pest inspector then not only will the person contracted provide advice directly to you, but you will also be in a position to ensure that the quality of the inspection and report meets your full expectations. This will enable you to enforce the contractual obligations.

Getting the best deal from the timber pest inspector

Naturally you will want to hire a timber pest inspector who will provide you with the most thorough and professional service at the best price. Factors such as the price, terms of the contract and the extent of the inspection can form the basis for your decision.

To get the best deal it is a good idea to shop around before you make your choice. You may ask several timber pest inspectors for written quotations for a timber pest inspection, then compare the quotations and the terms of the warranties. In Western Australia these are usually carried out by, but are not restricted to, professional building inspection services and licensed pest control operators.

Timber pest inspectors offer a range of levels of property inspection. You will need to decide how detailed and thorough you wish the inspection of the property to be and advise the timber pest inspector accordingly. A thorough inspection of an average sized home should take at least one hour.

When a timber pest inspection has been agreed to in the O & A, the timber pest inspector must be allowed full access to the premises. If a seller or their agent restricts the inspection in any way, or there are any areas that are inaccessible at the time of inspection, then a thorough report will note these facts.

If timber pest problems are discovered

If your timber pest inspection report indicates timber pest activity, your options will to some extent depend on the wording of the timber pest special condition in the O & A. Including your timber pest inspection as a special condition in the O & A will increase the likelihood of resolving the matter with the seller before settlement.

If you decide to continue with the purchase, and the special condition requires that the seller pay for timber pest damage and treatment, then it is recommended that you immediately write to the seller or their agent outlining the expected repairs and treatment. Make sure that it is understood that a further inspection will take place prior to settlement to confirm that proper treatment or repairs have been carried out.

If the special condition allows you to terminate the contract, you may decide to give written notice of termination to the seller or their agent according to the terms of the special condition.

If there is any ambiguity in the timber pest condition, you may need to see a lawyer for a legal interpretation of your position. In addition, if pest damage is discovered and there is no special condition in your contract covering this situation, it is suggested that you seek legal advice.
